The Disappearing Monk Seal

The Caribbean monk seal became officially extinct in 2008. Monk seals could grow to around 2.4 meters and they had gray or brown fur, and ate fish or octopus. The Caribbean monk seal was hunted for its oil, and the oil was used in machines. It was a gentle animal, and it wasn't scared of human beings. Therefore, it could be hunted and killed easily. There are now two other species of monk seal in the world, and both are endangered. There are only about 1,700 of these animals left in the world's oceans. In Hawaii, a law protects the monk seals and volunteers look after them. We need to make sure that these species of monk seal don't also become extinct.
